Algernon is Jack's witty and carefree friend who also adopts a false identity to pursue romance. His character represents the aristocratic tendency to flout social conventions and indulge in leisure and deception.

Gwendolen Fairfax and Cecily Cardew

These two female characters are romantic interests whose fixation on the name "Ernest" satirizes superficial Victorian values. Their personalities and interactions serve to emphasize the play's themes of identity and societal expectations for women.

Supporting Characters

Themes Explored in The Importance of Being Earnest

The Satire of Victorian Society

Wilde uses sharp wit to expose the hypocrisy and superficiality of Victorian social norms. The characters' obsession with names, social status, and marriage conventions mocks the era's rigidity and pretentiousness.

Identity and Duality

The motif of double lives and mistaken identities underscores the tension between appearance and reality. The theme of "earnestness" itself is questioned, with Wilde suggesting that honesty may be less important than social performance.

Marriage and Courtship

Marriage is portrayed as a social tool rather than a romantic union. The play highlights the transactional nature of courtship, especially through characters like Lady Bracknell, who prioritizes wealth and status over love.
